Introduction

Finally—the ultimate drawing guide for the anime artist!

This book focuses on the leading character types of anime based on the most popular genres. And best of all, it gives you templates you can use to draw a limitless number of variations on those characters.

What is a template? A template is a basic form that you can customize to create an original character. Each chapter begins with a basic template, such as a traditional schoolgirl character. Then I'll show you, step by step, how to add little changes to the eyes, hair, pose, costume, and their characters that show the color to end up with a completely original character. You'll never have to struggle to draw a character again. Why start from scratch,

This is also called a "model character" again. Why start from scratch, when you can begin with the templates in this book? For many aspiring artists, as well as seasoned

Schoolgirls

School life is a popular genre which features trademark school uniforms and engaging high school characters.

Schoolgirl types have a range of personalities, such as the amiable klutz, the hopeless romantic, and the wallflower. Often, characters share the same basic head and body shape; therefore, you can use the standard schoolgirl model, provided in this chapter, as the foundation for each one.

In other words, if you can draw one type, you can draw them all.

The characters are approximately 13 to 17 years old with large and expressive eyes and well-coordinated outfits. In addition, the hairstyle is an important feature of each character.

Once you've got the basics down, the next step is the key: creating original characters by

Head Proportions 360° Template No doubt you've run into this problem before: you've drawn a character, but you can't make it look the same when you draw it at another angle. The key lies in maintaining the character's basic underlying proportions. The following templates are based on average proportions. You can adjust them according to your taste.

- The head is as long (from top to bottom) as it is wide (from side to side).

- The eyes are placed lower on the face than on a realistically

The head is egg-shaped: wider on top and narrower at bottom, with a delicate chin and thin neck.

When the head turns to a ¾ view, the far side of the face and the features are compressed, therefore, the far eye appears slender.

Note the deep curve of the bridge of the nose and the inward angle of the mouth/chin area.

drawn person. (They're normally halfway down the head.)

Draw the eyes two-thirds of the way down the face.

- The eyes are also spaced somewhat farther apart here than they would appear on a real person.

- The ears are drawn between the eyes and the nose.

(On a real person, they're higher.)

- The neck is thin, which makes the head look wider by contrast.

Strands of hair dangling in front of the face can be seen from the back.

Round off the back of the head.

The cheeks appear fullest at the mouth level.

Templates for Eye Color

Every anime artist knows that the eyes are the most "stand out" feature of the face. Therefore, it's essential to individualize them in order to create an original character. Think about which eye color you envision for your character. Let's take a look at some popular options and techniques.

BLUE- BLACK

The large black pupils meld with the black shadow

GREEN

The bottom has blue fill. The darker green indicates shadow

BROWN

A thick outline surrounds the eyeballs; the pupils are tiny.

Selecting different color eyes for different characters makes it easier to create different identities when you have multiple characters in a scene

Creating Variations Based on the Template It's hard to create original characters from scratch.

But by using the templates in this book, you can create a limitless number of characters from the same basic head shape.

■ TYPE: CHEERFUL GIRL (LEAD CHARACTER TYPE): The following three elements are most useful for creating a variety of different characters from a single head shape: ■ HAIRSTYLE:

- Hairstyle (Varying the hairstyle is very important for creating different characters.)
- Coloring (eyes, hair, and outfit)
- Personality type (expression)

This is an essential character type. Note her hairstyle. Pigtails and ribbons give this character a bubbly charm. The short strands in front of her ears are the signature look of many schoolgirl characters. In the fantasy genre, these strands often become gigantic with dramatic swirls.

BASIC HEAD TEMPLATE

Each character in this section starts with this basic head shape. Notice how variations in hairstyle, coloring, and expression individualize them.

BASIC EYES TEMPLATE

DRAWING THE HAIR

The outline of the hair mirrors the shape of the skull (outlined in red).

An errant strand of hair is a fun touch on a lively character.

Hair color is also important. Yellow (blonde) communicates a sunny disposition.

Curling the pigtails inward adds life to them.

BASIC EYES TEMPLATE

■ TYPE:

THE BEST FRIEND

■ HAIRSTYLE:

LONG BOB WITH BANGS

We start with the same basic head construction as we did on the previous pages. With a simple hairstyle and color change, this character looks very different.

The best friend is an important character.

The conversations (dialogue) between the lead character and her best friend are used to move the story forward.

The best friend is mildly pretty, but should not outshine the star character's good looks! The best friend's hair is relaxed and casual.

Now we're going to veer from the basic template. At this point, we reinvent the hairstyle. The hair has just a touch on the droopy side, which will give her an honest and unassuming look.

Layer the hair to give it depth.
Hair hangs over the ears.

Some strands of hair seem to have a life of their own.
This makes the hair look natural and adds energy to the style.

■ TYPE: SILLY & CLUMSY
 ■ HAIRSTYLE:

WAVY

Comedy finds its way into practically every schoolgirl story. And the silly, good-natured klutz is a great character for comic relief. She needs a hairstyle that reflects her personality—something that doesn't take itself too seriously, like the character herself.

Wavy hair is a lively choice. As for color, we want something a little offbeat, which is why orange works well.

Give her hair a free look. Create symmetrical waves so that the hair bumps out at the same place on both sides of the head.

BASIC EYES TEMPLATE (EYES CLOSED)

The eyelashes appear thickest when the eyes are closed.

BASIC HEAD TEMPLATE

For middle parts, show a midline on the underside of the hair.

Freckles and blush finish the look.

Note the shaded interior of hair.

■ TYPE:

SHY GIRL

■ HAIRSTYLE:

PRINCESS CUT

The little secret among professional writers is that audiences love to feel sad. Characters that pull at our heartstrings pull us into the story. The shy girl is a somewhat withdrawn, and a sympathetic, character. The traditional Japanese name for this haircut is hime (literally "princess cut"). It's a blunt multilayered cut that was worn by nobility in ancient times and in today's popular anime.

BASIC HEAD TEMPLATE

BASIC EYES TEMPLATE

Subdued expression

Gray eyes are an unusual color pick, but when tied into the gray hair color, it works as a theme to make her appear low key and wistful.

More Variations

These schoolgirl types are based on the exact same head types and expressions as before. And yet, because of the difference in hairstyles and accessories, each has a distinct look. This demonstrates the power of mixing and matching different components when creating your own original characters.

LIFE OF THE PARTY

The extrovert's oversized sunglasses, curly hair, and energetic curls are a good

LOVE-OBSSESSED

Untamed hair and choppy bangs reflect stormy emotions. We use that trait as the springboard

These two "loner" types share the same head shape: sleek and slightly elongated (less round). However, because the hair, eyes, expression, and hint of an outfit are different, each becomes a unique character.

Glasses are stereotypical for "brainy" characters.

BOOK WORM LONER

The "loner" type is an important cast member in the school-life genre. Everyone can relate to feeling like an outsider at some point.

The middle part creates a neat and symmetrical look.

Heavily shaded upper eyeballs add a glamorous and wistful look.

MYSTERY GIRL LONER

The mysterious loner is beautiful but dreamy. It's as if we're seeing her through a window.

Hair lays flat on her head until ear level, at which point it opens up with waves.

Schoolgirl Body Proportions

This standard body works for most schoolgirl types. To create individualized characters, you can draw the figure fuller or with somewhat longer legs, and so on; however, making too many changes to the basic type can lead you down the rabbit hole, where you ultimately lose the integrity of the character. Making minor changes avoids this problem. And that brings us to the subject of character height.

CHARACTER & HEIGHT TEMPLATE
 Nothing defines characters in a cast as effectively as varying their heights. The viewer instinctively notes, “That’s the tall one, that’s the short one, and that one’s average height”—and then begins to associate the character with its relative height in the group. Notice that the heights don’t need to vary much in order to create a

Fashions & Outfits

The next stage in the development of an original character is the outfit. Since the bodies are based on the same template, the clothing is what differentiates one character from another. In other words, your choice of fashions becomes part of the character design. Let's explore some clothing ideas that help to

USING VARIETY

Many outfits are created from a variety of elements that match well with one another. If they match too closely, there's no contrast. If they are too dissimilar, they won't go well with each other. Strike a balance between the two approaches.

Feet are shoulder width apart—and turned inward for a youthful look.

Raise elbows above their resting height.

Raise shoulders for attitude.

A narrow waist lets the outfit have a tapered look.

Give the hips some width so that the skirt will fan outward.

ALTERNATING LONG & SHORT CLOTHING

The vest is short, but the shirt underneath is long. The skirt is short, but the leggings are long. Combining short items with long items creates interest. Note the high number of folds in the sleeves. Extra folds are created when a joint is bent, like the arms.

Make sure there's plenty of "negative space" between arms and body.

Long, tapered legs

SWEATERS & SKIRTS

Sweaters and skirts go together like sea urchin and rice. (That's the Japanese version of PB & J.)

A sweater vest is often slightly oversized. And schoolgirls frequently wear them with pleated skirts. This fun pose shows motion, which will be reflected in the way the skirt flaps. Let's first build the pose based on the template model.

The tilt of the hips will cause the skirt to flap.

Running with one hand free (the bent arm will hold the tote bag) is an awkward and therefore a funny—pose.

Point the knee inward for a funny run.

She leans to the left, which will cause the valise to swing to the right. This is based on an animation principle known as "secondary action."

She's very experienced in running for class, which means that she's always late!

As she lands, her sweater vest compresses with folds and wrinkles.

The colors of the outfit—pinks, peaches, and pinks—tie into each other throughout the image.

Simplified constructions are the essential foundations for all of your characters. It doesn't require extra time to start with them; it saves time. The more you refine the

More Outfits

The hips move forward as she leans back. Straighten legs.

SHORT JACKET

A short jacket will show a bit of the skirt at the bottom. A scarf works well when it flows. Simple shoes finish the outfit.

ATTACHED TOP & BOTTOM

This contemporary bathing suit is attached in the middle by a ring.

The character leans forward, immersed in what she's doing.

Legs overlap, creating an elegant look.

TWO-PIECE TIED WITH SCARF

Note the accessories: necklace and a bracelet.

Drawing Bathing Suits

Like every other outfit, bathing suits also require a little flair—and a degree of modesty. One basic design idea is enough for creating a bathing suit. Too many design elements make them appear too busy.

Fashion Selections for the Basic Schoolgirl
 For creating eye-catching characters, you can't beat choosing the right outfit. Clothes enhance a character's attractiveness and help to define her personality. It's as much a part of her character design as her facial features or proportions. Although characters may have varied wardrobes, their identity often centers on a specific outfit.

VARIETY IN SCHOOL UNIFORMS

The word uniform suggests that there is one standard outfit. There isn't. Within the category of school uniforms, you can create a host of appealing fashions by mixing and matching mostly traditional (and a few not-so-traditional)

Using Emotions to Create Original Characters
Each of the schoolgirls in this last section of the chapter represents a different personality type. We have already tweaked the head and body and created outfits.

HARRIED & HAPPY

But there's one more step. And that's to give your character an action pose or posture that defines her personality.

Let's look at four basic character types and discover how their actions express who they are.

One leg extends.

One leg is extended to counterbalance extended leg.

Hair trails behind, which is called "secondary action" and indicates movement.

Foot is high off the ground, indicating a quick run.

She looks back as she speaks—there's no time to stop and turn around! The leaves dust up around her to reflect the chaos of the scene.

“... Don't forget to text
me after your date with Aki!”

BRAID

THE UNNOTICED

Not the same as the loner, who enjoys being apart from the group, the unnoticed type craves companionship but can't find it. Perhaps she's painfully

NATURAL -BORN GOSSIPS

The "mean girl" is a popular character type, sometimes referred to in Japanese as tsundere.

If you've ever been to high school, you've encountered her wickedness. In this scene, two gossips are verbally dismantling another student.

Mean girls are often seen in pairs: the caustic leader and the bubbleheaded follower.

When one character touches another it creates a unit, making them both appear to be on the same side.

Their eye directions need to align, focusing on the same subject.

"I bet that's not even her real hair color!"

PLAYFUL TYPES

Wherever they are, these best friends enjoy a good laugh. These cheerful types are used to keep stories rolling in a humorous way. Their poses are relaxed and spontaneous.

The students face each other in a  $\frac{3}{4}$  view, which allows the viewer to see more of their faces than if they were in strict profiles.

Both figures lean toward each other, perhaps sharing a secret.

The characters never really listen to the lecture.

The feet should appear to make contact with the floor.

“I hope the substitute teacher doesn't expect anyone to actually pay attention.”

Schoolboys

Schoolboys share common characteristics:

They have an affable and bright-eyed appearance.

The physique has yet to fill out. (Usually only the upper classmen are tall.) He's still awkward.

the clothes are a little unkempt—for example, shirt out, sleeves rolled up, tie loosened, and so on. Keep these general parameters in mind when thinking up your own schoolboy characters.

Head Proportions 360° Template The typical schoolboy's head is based on an egg shape. The bottom half of the head tapers sharply to a narrow chin.

Overall, the face has a soft look. The large forehead

BASIC CONSTRUCTION

is covered with messy hair. The eyes are large, though not as brilliant as his female equivalent. He can only stay neat and tidy for the first few hours of the school day. After that, he starts to unravel!

Top of head is wide; the bottom half is narrow.

He's a boy. What did you expect?

It's axiomatic that the better looking and older the schoolboy is, the more the girls want him—and the more oblivious he is to their overtures. Conversely, the younger the schoolboy is, the more likely it is that he's the one doing the pursuing—with much success to show for his efforts.

- The eye shape is more horizontal (side-to-side) than vertical (up and down).
- If he has a lot of hair, sometimes that can obscure

Basic Schoolboy Character (3/4 View)

The basic template for the head is set in place in the first few steps. Once the basic structure is in place, you can individualize your character by adjusting these elements:

- Hairstyle (including volume of hair)
- Hair color
- Eye color
- Expression

Start your head with the vertical center line curving around the egg-shaped head. The center line is drawn about two-thirds of the way over to the left on the head. The horizontal eye line should be drawn about halfway up the head.

Carve out a sleeker look to the lower half of the face. Due to perspective, the far eye almost touches the center line.

Notice that the neck connects to the head just behind the ear.

The hair is layered and combed in no particular direction.

The final character is appealing and slightly humorous.

A harmless smile is a good look for this character type.

To Redraw or Not to

Here's a common problem everyone comes across. Let's say you've just drawn the basic head shape with a glistening pair of eyes. You even call your parents and tell them your anime is improving, and they respond, "What's anime?" And then your mom says, "Wear a hat when you go outside today. It's cold." You blow off the hat suggestion and return to your drawing. Then you realize that you drew the eyes too close together.

It's at this point that the serious artist and the newbie part ways. The newbie works around the error. The serious artist sheds a few tears, erases, and redraws. I would love to give you an easy fix for correcting a Basic 360° Schoolboy Body Template The schoolboy isn't done growing; he hasn't reached his full height, and his physique is not terribly impressive. And his brain, well, don't even go there. Just like his face, his body has a soft look.

There's nothing really rugged about it. His proportions are well balanced without the exaggerated length of some other popular, mature male character types.

Seniors have the most social status, while juniors and sophomores have only some and freshmen are considered "fresh meat." The height and build communicate the age to the viewer.

Classic Schoolboy Guys hate class picture day. It's the one day in high school when your mom insists on dressing you. But even at times like this, our teenage boy has found a way to make his freshly pressed outfit unkempt and wrinkled. That takes talent. And yet, he has a casual charisma that allows him to pull it off—with style to spare. Focus on his predominant qualities: modest good

Preteens

Younger characters have their own age-specific genre, which is popular, called kodomo.

But they also appear as supporting characters across a wide spectrum of anime stories as younger siblings, neighborhood kids, and as the youngest member of a group of slightly older students. These characters are famous for being funny, curious, mischievous, and sometimes even brave. They often face a big moral dilemma in a story. The choice they make leads them on amazing, and often harrowing, adventures—with good or bad results. The comedy is broad, and pratfalls are not an uncommon occurrence.

Popular preteen personality types are many: silly, nervous, foolishly brave,

Preteen Head Proportions 360° Template

FEMALE PROPORTIONS

The eyes take up considerable space on the face. The nose is only slightly indicated.

Hair typically covers a lot of head area: almost the entire top half.

The bridge of the nose has a deep concave curve.

Petite neck is visible even from behind.

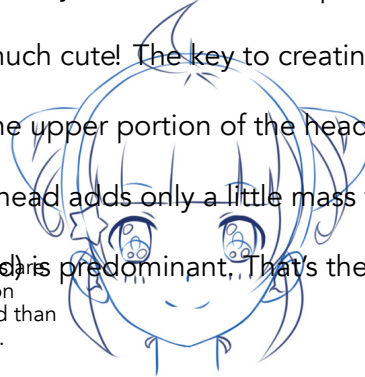

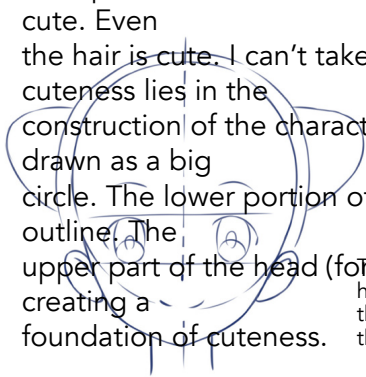

Small, upturned nose protrudes just a little past the forehead.

A portion of the back head is visible in the 3/4 angle.

GIRL STEP BY STEP

With preteens, cuteness rules. The eyes are cute. The expression is cute. Even the hair is cute. I can't take so much cute! The key to creating cuteness lies in the construction of the character. The upper portion of the head is drawn as a big circle. The lower portion of the head adds only a little mass to the outline. The upper part of the head (forehead) is predominant. That's the key to creating a foundation of cuteness.

The eyes are higher on the head than the ears.

The nose and mouth are simplified. But the hair is drawn with more complex line work. The bangs cut straight across.

The upper eyelids are the boldest lines of this image. An important note: the eyelids do not require an abundance of eyelashes in order to be pretty.

A fun hair accessory (the star) adds to the cuteness, as does the playful hair color.

MALE PROPORTIONS

The preteen boy's head construction is similar, but the lower half of his face (from the ears to the chin) is slightly narrower than the preteen girl's.

Also, his eyes are somewhat smaller.

BOY STEP BY STEP

Once you establish the basic proportions of the head, you can focus on creating the features of the face and an appealing hairstyle with the confidence that the overall look of the head will be correct. When the framework is in place, the rest flows together easily.

The circle, which represents the top portion of the head, reaches down to the mouth level.

Soft ruffles of hair flop over the forehead in a casual manner.

Draw high, arching eyebrows.

Hair color doesn't have to be realistic. Some artists use pink for girls and blue for boys. But this is only one approach. You aren't locked into using stereotypical male and female color schemes.

Body Proportions Templates

Preteens exude an energetic and cute posture. A common mistake new artists make is to draw the body with lots of straight lines. If you look at a diagram of a skeleton, you'll see that the limbs and even the spine have subtle curves. Here are some more tips:

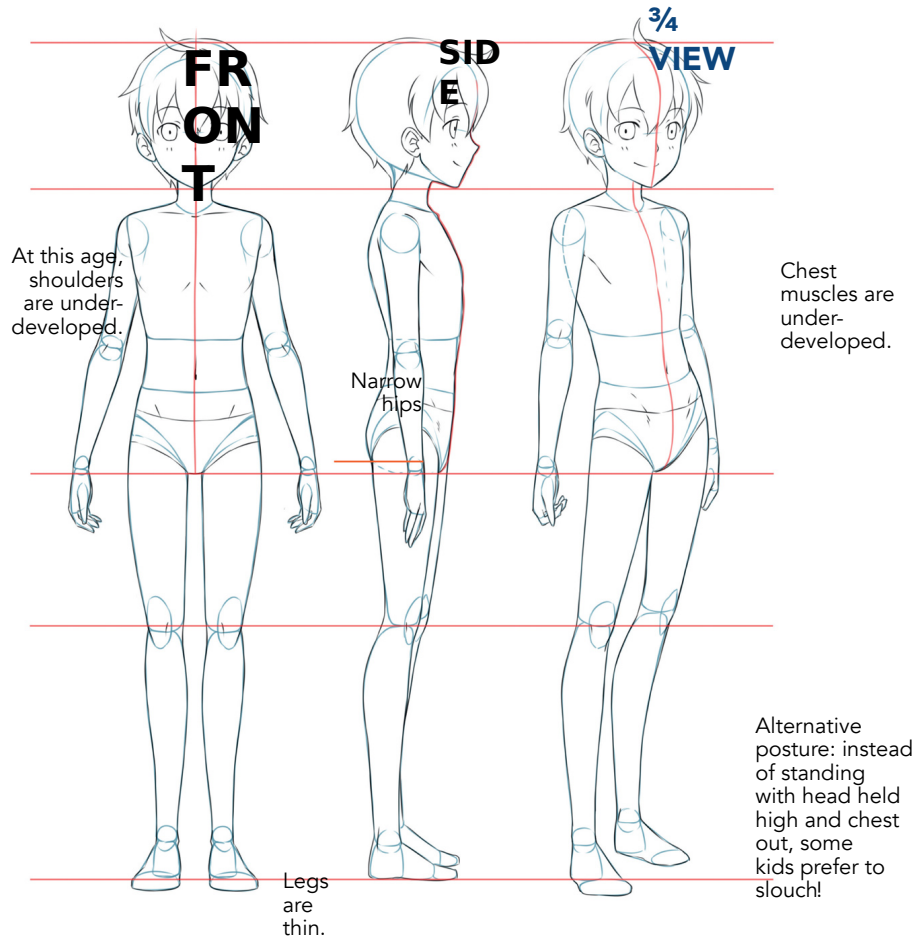

- The shoulders are square, but small.
- The head is large, relative to the overall size of the body.
- The torso is slightly

Avoid a super skinny waist.

PRETEEN GIRL

Young female characters generally have hips that

Preteen Personality Types

It's safer to keep the character type broad. Don't make it so unique that people can't relate to it. To do this, start by coming up with a broad "umbrella" term to describe your character, such as Hero. Get more specific as you fine-tune the character type (subtype). For example, "Hero" becomes "The Reluctant Hero" or "The Accidental Hero" or "The Hero with a Secret Identity." This conveys a personality to go with the overarching character type.

GENERAL CATEGORY: THE POPULAR BOY

A confident smile pulls to one side.

Indicate the joints with circles and the bones with lines.

Arm muscles are underdeveloped.

■ Subtype: Adventurous

PHYSICAL TRAITS

Bright eyed. Funny expressions, with restless hair and sporty clothing.

PERSONALITY

Has a twinkle in his eyes. The type of kid who is nice all year round, Ten bucks says he ends up getting into trouble.

GENERAL CATEGORY: THE SMART TYPE

Big eyes are essential. Note the extreme slenderizing of the far eye, due to perspective.

■ Subtype: Clever Teen

PHYSICAL TRAITS

Slightly downturned eyebrows, which shows a bit of cunning.

Conventional hairstyle. The smooth line around the back of her head emphasizes its roundness, which is a cute quality. The sailor suit school uniform gives her a cheerful look.

PERSONALITY

When all looks hopeless, she comes up with answers!
Chipper and affable, she's part of a group but remains an individual thinker. Tends to "chibi out" when fuming.

GENERAL CATEGORY: BULLY

■ Subtype: The Sneak

PHYSICAL TRAITS

This compulsive liar dresses like a "good kid," but it only makes him look slimy! His eyebrows are sharp, and his nose is short and upturned.

PERSONALITY

The consummate actor. The only thing that you can't do is stab you in the back—and blame someone else for it.

A natural poser and egotist!

GENERAL CATEGORY: FEARFUL

Due to poor self-esteem, head tilts slightly downward.

Raise one shoulder and "droop" the other one

Tuck chin in, a sign of insecurity.

■ Subtype: Bullied

PHYSICAL TRAITS

Note the thin neck and drooping hair. Non-descript shirt and outfit. He prefers not to stand out.

PERSONALITY

Fearful of rejection, afraid of confrontation. A sympathetic character.

Someone needs to stand up to bullies and be his friend.

GENERAL CATEGORY: MEAN GIRL

Her eyebrows always turn slightly downward into a semi-frown.

■ Subtype: Group Leader

PHYSICAL TRAITS

Show lots of forehead. Give her a bow in her hair to contrast with her sarcastic demeanor. Loud red hair underscores her personality.

PERSONALITY

Unlike the sneak, the mean girl has no pretense about who she is. She likes to belittle others, and she likes to be known for it.

She always has it in for somebody.

GENERAL CATEGORY: TIMID/SHY

Shoulders raised are indicative of surprise.

Symmetrical hair conveys a prim and proper look.

Body language: a delicate hand gesture is effective.

■ Subtype: Gullible

PHYSICAL TRAITS

An overall sweet, somewhat childlike look. Big, innocent eyes. Blush added to the face as needed.

PERSONALITY

Too trusting. Super honest. When she says she doesn't have today's assignment because her dog ate her homework, that means her dog really did eat her assignment!

"You really have a pet unicorn?"

GENERAL CATEGORY: BRAINY

A meek build is a stereotype for brainy characters. Nonetheless, it's a look that works.

Underplay his expression.

■ Subtype: Self-Confident

The attire is neat and never flashy.

PHYSICAL TRAITS

A subdued smile combined with half-closed eyelids reflect his sarcastic nature. He is small of stature.

PERSONALITY

He doesn't need to shout.
He can destroy someone with a few caustic observations.

He mastered string theory when he was only five years old.

GENERAL CATEGORY: THE STUDIOUS GIRL

■ Subtype: Know-It-All

PHYSICAL TRAITS

Sapping all trendiness from her hairstyle and outfit produces a character who looks older than her years. Her eyes are intense with short and sharp eyebrows.

PERSONALITY

She has no hesitation about correcting people. This makes her lots of fun at parties. She has zero sense of humor and never gets a

POP FASHION GIRL

This character has a great time wherever she goes. To her, life's a beach. She's popular, and people like to be around her. But she's unprepared to invest the necessary time to do her schoolwork or chores. But there needs to be a conflict to set up a story. For example, her parents may have Ivy League ambitions for her.

The pop girl wears splashy clothes.

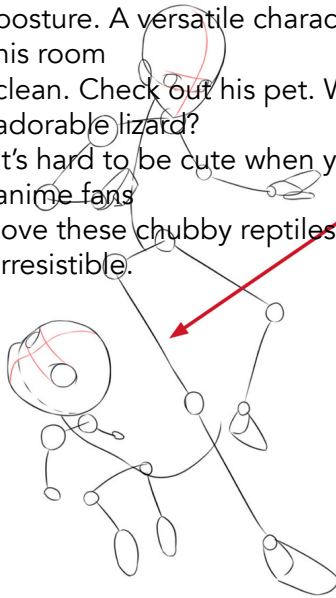

The hair trails behind to show motion, likewise her skirt.

Point the toes for a feminine look.

BOY WITH FRIENDLY CREATURE

Here's another young fun-seeker. Look at that energetic pose with forward-leaning posture. A versatile character, he can do almost anything except keep his room clean. Check out his pet. When was the last time you ran into an adorable lizard? It's hard to be cute when your diet consists of flies and larvae. And yet, anime fans love these chubby reptiles. Their big eyes and smile make them irresistible.

Villains

Good looking, anti-social characters are everywhere in anime. They have a dangerous type of charisma and keep the story moving forward.

They may appear sensitive on the outside, but on the inside they have no feelings except for themselves. When they get into fights, they're as fierce as a sunburnt ferret with a thorn in its paw. (I kind of got stuck for a metaphor.) ■

Variations in the Villain Template ■ TYPE: THE “HONEST” VILLAIN

This head construction can be tweaked to create numerous bad guy types. This is the first variation. He’s a popular type who looks like the boy next door—if the boy next door were half a foot taller, older, broader, and with hungry eyes. Outwardly, he’s polite and friendly.

Long, blond hair and a friendly smile are his hallmark traits. He’s even properly dressed in a shirt and tie, which, apparently, he just had a fight in.

Color images are great for conveying the total look of the character; however, color can sometimes obscure detailed line work. Therefore, this character is presented in “gray tone.”

Some people assume that simply because a guy has a cruel, predatory look in his eyes and wears a samurai haircut, it automatically labels him a bad guy. If we give in to these stereotypes, the next thing you know, people will be saying that anyone with an eye patch, scars, and spikes in their arms is also bad. Where does it end?

The basic head proportions of the samurai punk are the same as the other bad guys, except that we've tweaked the chin to be slightly narrower. Note the impact that a different hairstyle can have: it completely reinvents the character.

COOL DUDE

When you and I daydream, we think about stuff like vacations and pizza. When anime bad guys daydream, they think about revenge. There are so many ways to get even, it's so hard to decide.

Draw back and hips along a diagonal line.

By positioning the far leg out in front, you suggest depth in the pose.

Adding a seam line to the long pant legs prevents the area from appearing empty.

DAYDREAMING ABOUT REVENGE

Seriously, who doesn't? Even bad guys can indulge in a reflective moment. He's thinking of all of the people he has hurt over the years. Ah, good times, good times . . .

The  $\frac{3}{4}$  view leg is shorter (due to effects of perspective).

Why feel sorry for bad guys? Because people only fear them. No one considers their good qualities. For example, he supports his elderly parents by paying their rent from the money he's stolen. Well, it's a start.

WILD THING

The bad guys of anime aren't scary-looking creeps. They're good-looking creeps. They appear normal. They fit in. This makes it very difficult to tell who is a good guy and who is bad. This adds suspense to stories featuring these characters.

Many beginners forget that when people lean against the wall, they lean! Therefore, draw the torso tilting back.

Bunch the clothes at the elbow.

Add a wrinkle at the knee to break up the shape of the leg.

It's all in the body language. Note the sly, sidelong glance that he gives the reader.

A useful device for introducing a bad guy is an omen. Use some kind of sign that indicates all is not well. An omen could be dark thunderclouds up ahead or people bathed in shadow. In this scene, the portent comes

Humor in

Anime

Anime is peppered with comedic characters; but how do you draw a character that is meant to be funny?

One effective way is to draw a character that's a little "too much" of whatever their personality trait is. For example, a perky character would be a little too perky. And an angry character would be a little too

explosive. Also, keep the outfits simple; too much visual complexity muddles comedy. Most humorous characters are drawn with a pleasing simplicity. Let's take a look. ■

Humorous Head Proportions: The Wink Most often, the humorous head is simple and round. The eyes are extra large, for exaggerated expressions. Be bold in your depiction of emotions using a comedy character. For example, a dramatic character wondering about something might look wistful, while a humorous character would look confused.

■ KEY DETAILS:
FRONT

- Wide, elastic face, perfect for a host of different expressions
- Extra-large eyes
- High, arched eyebrows
- Small mouth that can "rubberize" to extremes for exaggerated expressions

The famous anime wink is a popular, playful look that's a fan favorite. The winking eye isn't drawn along the same level as the bottom of the open eye, but at a level that bisects it. The wink is exaggerated because it breaks with the story line and brings the audience in on the joke.

■ KEY DETAILS: PROFILE

- Although the irises of the eyes become slender in profile, be sure to maintain the length (up and down).
- Gentle slope of nose
- The outline of the face remains closed, even when the mouth is opened. This technique, widely used in manga, comes from anime. It was originally invented for practical reasons. When a character spoke, only the mouth moved on a cel overlay. However, this is not a signature look for manga, too.

■ KEY DETAILS: BACK

- The hat adds size to the outline of the head.
- Pull the hat down in back.
- Show the back of the neck just above the collar.

Funny Body Proportions for Humorous Characters

An open expression, cute figure, and cheerful color scheme make her fun, not "funny looking." Humor works best when it's derived from what a character says and does. Funny reactions get laughs. A funny-looking sidekick is fine, but if you want to create an appealing

A cute outfit gives the comedic character a wholesome look.

Popular Comedy Character Variations

There are many different types of comedy in anime. Although the outfits and fashions may change, the basic template for the “humorous type” remains the same. In this section, we’ll create funny variations through the fashions and costumes, personality types, hairstyles, and poses. In this genre, expressions are key.

His limbs are going in all different directions—“Mr. Coordination.”

The pseudo martial arts master wears what he makes him look like an eleventh-degree black belt, even though there are only ten degrees! The outfit needs to look like something he purchased from a catalog. It shouldn't look official; just pretentious. I still can't figure out what those mesh sleeves are for.

Broad expressions work well here, so I gave him a plus. The mesh is official. And the hair reacts to his body on the head.

For this character to work to its fullest comedic effect, give him two chibi friends laughing at him!

She has graceful hair, big eyes, and a tall and slender build. Her costume is elaborate and striking. She can be situated in present day, or in the future or the past. ■

REGULAR GIRL VS FANTASY GIRL
 When I went to high school. But anthropomorphism aside, the main difference is that the fantasy character is longer, giving her an exaggerated look of gracefulness.

If the only difference between the regular girl and the fantasy girl were height, then any tall character would look like a fantasy type. But it's the proportions that create the real difference. The fantasy character appears idealized, which means her proportions will be elongated.

REGULAR GIRL (NORMAL PROPORTIONS)

FANTASY GIRL (LONGER PROPORTIONS)

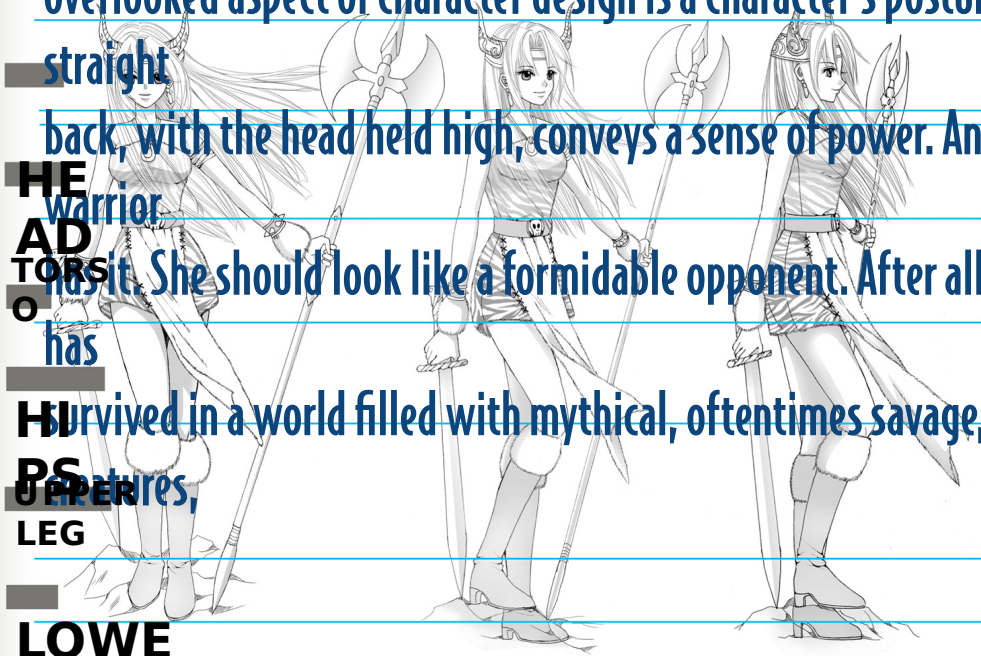

Basic Proportions of the Heroic Pose The fantasy figure can be tricky. So let's learn the trick. The challenge is in making her look strong and at the same time graceful. A frequently overlooked aspect of character design is a character's posture. A straight back, with the head held high, conveys a sense of power. And this warrior has it. She should look like a formidable opponent. After all, she has survived in a world filled with mythical, oftentimes savage, creatures,

When you think of the word accessories, what do you think of? If you're a fantasy character, you're probably thinking about body armor and spears.

Fantasy Character Types Costumes are all-important for creating original fantasy characters. And that's where you'll want to spend most of your creative energies.

To MIKO URBAN simplify the process, begin with the standard template for fantasy bodies, and then customize the costume to create a unique character.

A traditional character (often referred to as a historical character), fitted with mecha-style weaponry, is an eye-catching look that promises action. In this case, the character is a miko—a shrine maiden or priestess.

This urban fighter is created by combining contradictory themes:

- Cute and dangerous
- Traditional and futuristic
- Petite and powerful
- Cloth and metal

Fantasy people are often befriended by fantasy creatures.

Strength with beauty

With such massive weaponry, she needs a sturdy pose with legs spread shoulder width apart.

Superlong, flowing hair is a signature of the fantasy genre.

Diagonal lines make for a cooler image than verticals and horizontals.

The "fish" section of the body is longer than the "human" torso.

A big curve to the lower body creates an appealing flow.

FANTASY-STYLE MERMAID

I wrestled with the title of this character. On the one hand, fantasy mermaid describes her accurately. On the other hand, someone is sure to leap at the opportunity to write to me and ask, "If that's a fantasy mermaid, what does a real mermaid look like?"

Nice try. The answer is that ordinary mermaids aren't as fancy. A plain mermaid, clearly not between upper and lower half of body like

Jewels and accessories, tends to look like a blue plate special. Therefore, adorn her in gold and aquatic-themed trinkets, such as jewelry in the form of shells, pearls, and stars. And give her a fancy trident to hold.

Oversized tail

Flowing hair, which is underwater, should appear to flow as if it doesn't have weight.

It never dawns on her that it would be so much easier to swim without all that gold.

The more delicate the designs of the accessories, the less clunky they will appear.

Blue and gold is a dazzling combination. It looks regal.

More aquatic-themed visuals: lower dorsal fins, which look almost like a half-cape.

"Mom,
can
I keep the dolphin?
Please?"

NORDIC WARRIOR

Part of the mystique of the fantasy genre derives from the ubiquitous animal-skin costumes. In Nordic environments, these rugged costumes signify the struggle against the elements. You'll notice that our fantasy warrior's animal skin doesn't come with a zipper. In fact, it looks rather chilly all opened like that. Why not at least sew some buttons on the thing and close it shut? Because then she'd be covered from head to toe in that white fuzzy coat, which would make her look like a gigantic dust bunny. The only way to create a dynamic pose is to show the pose. Ergo, open the garment.

Archers always aim upward. The reason it's called "archery" is because the arrows are shot upward, they peak, and then arch back down to wreak havoc on the enemy.

A ¾ view is a good choice for this pose. It shows the character facing left but isn't as flat as a strict side view.

For a dramatic look,
create a huge bow.

Wearing a hat made out of a giant jaw would make me nervous,
but to each her own.

rabbit warrior?
He may not look like much, but if you are ever attacked by a
fierce chipmunk,
he's your guy.

THE HUMAN SACRIFICE

Next time you think you're having a bad day, think about how she feels. Rituals involving human sacrifices happen all the time in the fantasy genre. It creates the most dramatic time squeeze. A "time squeeze" is a plot device, whereby you've got a limited amount of time before dire consequences happen. If she doesn't free herself before the guys with the fancy hats arrive, she's toast. Or, to be more accurate, a kabob.

Head tilts downward showing weakness

Squeeze between rib cage and hips.

Stretch between rib cage and hips.

Knees together indicates helplessness

Hair flows in wave-like strands.

Forelorn expression

Slit robe

Elaborate headdress

Note the many fold lines in the garment.

Decorative accessories include a tiara, belt, and boots.

Her posture remains straight, which shows the effect of the restraints upon her.

You know the saying,
"Things could always be worse"?
No, they couldn't.

I think the lesson here is that if you're in a primitive society and the head guy in the rituals department asks for a volunteer, point to the person next to you.
